

Damn it, Maddy!

Throne:

Borden always wanted to be a kingmaker. Since childhood, he had seen coup discussions between his influential father and political conspirators. He became so interested in politics that he almost forgot that he had the capability and privilege to be a king rather than to be a kingmaker. In adulthood, Borden was famous for his mastermind strategies, but everyone used to respect his noble heart ethics more. He gained Leo's courage to confront social norms through his eagle-eyed vision for posterity.

Like most Zoomers then, Borden also had a girlfriend named Ira. For others, she was attractive, but for Borden, she was such an angel that he never questioned even her silliest choices. In love, Borden became more loyal to Ira than to himself.

Completely contrast to trendy Ira was her cousin named Maddy. Maddy, being older, was the most composed and sensible girl in her group. Maddy had such beautiful eyes that even the fake beholder realized real lies about her real eyes. Everyone in Borden's pool knew that Maddy was the crush of Borden's rockstar cousin named Neil. Although no one taught him, but Neil has already hijacked all the trades of quick-wittedness since childhood. Neil was the one who wanted to become a King, but he didn't have the privilege even to become a Kingmaker.

Battle:

Borden was fully aware of Neil's capabilities and ambitions. He was also familiar with Neil's not-so-corrupt pathways. However, Borden's big-hearted intelligence ignored Neil's instances of silly corruptness because Borden observed the world enough to conclude that lucky corruptness comes from unlucky misfortune. Borden's implied actions from unexhibited values use to make Neil envious.

Spring was over, and Maddy's twenty-third birthday was approaching. Being aware of Neil's irresistible fondness for Maddy's eyes, Borden asked his love, Ira, who was also Maddy's cousin, to help Neil. Ira suggested Neil to gift a unique present to Maddy.

All were aware of Neil's current sadist financials. Having an internal illusion of the kingmaker's self-image, Borden thinks that Neil would be impressed if Borden gave money for the present. Ira, Neil and Borden planned to pretend that Neil was the one who bought the gift for Maddy. Neil always wanted to flaunt, but he had little to demonstrate. Neil wanted to gift a necklace to Maddy. But Ira requested Neil and Borden to buy a memorable pet. For these delusionalistic people, this present was a bullet to their different targets.

Nevertheless, after continuous rejections and research, Ira hooked up with a beautiful emerald parrot named Minion, brought from Macau. Minion was costly, but it was an eye-catcher. One day before birthday eve, Minion was beautifully placed in a small silver cage to present on Maddy's birthday. Borden locked the cage and handed Neil the other two keys.

Next, with a charming smile on Maddy's day, Neil presented Minion and its key to Maddy and proposed to her. Seeing such a lovely parrot, Maddy fell in love with Neil at that very moment. Another love story began!

But politics played its part. The following day, Neil saw the unfastened lock, and the cute Minion had fastened from the cage.

Ruler:

When a parrot named Pastor from Minion's flock asked him about his encounter with love and the throne, Minion revealed that it was Ira who had told Maddy the real truth about the fake money contribution of Neil. But before Ira told Maddy, Neil had already told Maddy the fake truth about the real money contribution of Borden. "So, Who unlocked you out of the cage? Were you watching closely?" asked Pastor.

"Borden made me the king of the free sky", replied Minion. "But I thought Maddy would have gifted your freedom back", Pastor told Minion his thought. "Yeah, Borden lied to Neil that Maddy let me out of the cage.", said Minion. "What if Maddy told Neil she didn't let you out?" Pastor's curiosity awakened.

"Aren't you listening closely?"